identities. Identities are established through relationship, hence they are not static but a variable persistence. Reader 1A: A Global Sense of Place Summary Sense of place. While Massey has argued for the importance of place, her position accords with those arguing against essentialised or static notions, where: places do not have single identities but multiple ones. places are not frozen in time, they are processes. places are not enclosures with a clear inside and outside. Doreen Massey (geographer) - Wikipedia The term sense of place has been used in many different ways. It is a multidimensional, complex construct used to characterize the relationship between people and spatial settings. It is a characteristic that some geographic places have and some do not, while to others it is a feeling or perception held by people. It is often used in relation to those characteristics that make a place special or unique, as well as to those that foster a sense of authentic human attachment and belonging. Others, Sense of place - Wikipedia She further argues that we need a progressive or global sense of place – a global sense of the local – which is adequate to an era of space-time compression. This understands each place as a focus of a distinct mixture of both wider and more local social relations, and which interact with the accumulated history of a place.
