Criminal Evidence For Police Third The ability to obtain evidence from a neutral third party eliminates this risk. Similarly, while a prosecutor might subpoena records from a suspect, that risks their destruction despite the threat of criminal liability for obstruction. Once again, third party records access largely eliminates that risk. Law Enforcement Access to Third Party Records Standards Are Third Party Consent Searches Legal? Generally, if a suspect is going to be searched by the police, the police needs a search warrant to search in places where the person has a “reasonable expectation of privacy” (such as in their bedroom or living quarters). However, the police can still search such areas without a warrant if the suspect willingly and knowingly consents to such a search.
