Multivariate Analysis Of Ecological Data Multivariate Analysis of Ecological Data is a comprehensive and structured explanation of how to analyse and interpret ecological data observed on many variables, both biological and environmental.
After a general introduction to multivariate ecological data and statistical methodology, specific chapters focus on methods such as clustering, regression, biplots, multidimensional scaling, correspondence analysis (both simple and canonical) and log-ratio analysis, as well as issues of modelling ... Multivariate Analysis of is the product of the interaction between many species, be they marine, plant or animal life, and of the many limiting factors that characterize the environment in which the species live. Multivariate analysis uses relationships between variables to order the objects of study according to their collective properties, and to classify the objects of study, that is to group species or ecosystems in distinct classes each containing

... Multivariate Analysis of Ecological Data | Greenacre ... It is primarily targeted at ecologists who need to analyse data resulting from field observations and experiments. Multivariate statistical methods are described, and advice is given on how best to apply these methods using Canoca software. Data sets
